Who We Are

Onix Data Centre Ltd owns and operates carrier neutral collocation data centres in the Africa region. Its flagship facility is the top-rated Tier IV certified, carrier neutral co-location Data Centre based in Accra, Ghana, the only Tier IV in the sub region.

As the only Tier IV, collocation facility in the region, Onix Data Centre offers stable, reliable, and uninterrupted service of power and cooling with an annual expected uptime of 99.995%. As a colocation facility, clients benefit from efficient cooling systems, clean and reliable power, robust physical security and back up energy redundancy with minimal costs compared to building and maintaining an in-house data facility. We are linking Africa to global digital networks, enabling international collaboration and trade.

Media Style

1. Social Media Style
2. Co-Branding Principles
3. Brand Assets

Our Social Media Style

We are naturally friendly, professional, and approachable intonation. Our communication style is characterised by simplicity, clarity, and a commitment to elevating Africa's digital infrastructure and integration into the global digital framework.

Friendly and Professional

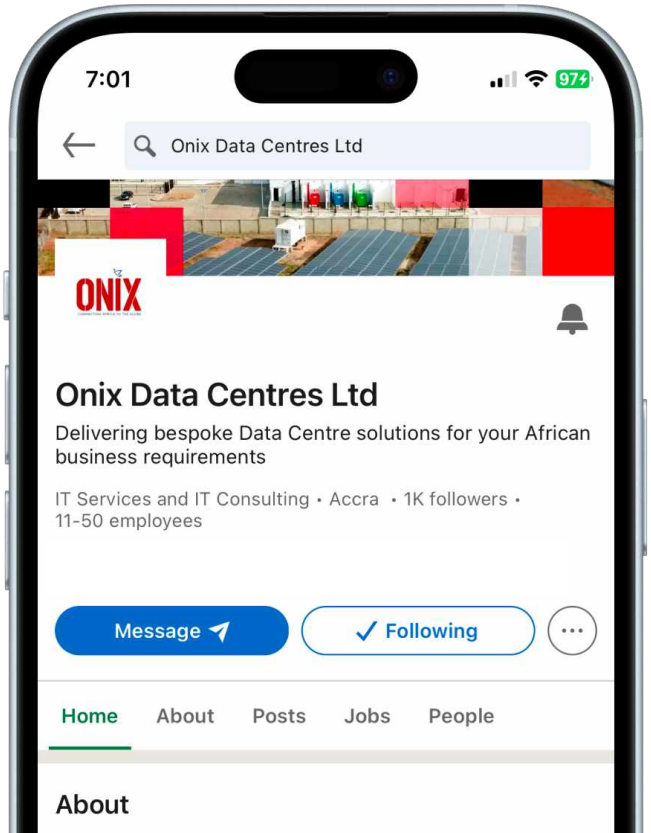

Our social media interactions are warm, welcoming, and relatable. We treat our followers as friends, engaging in authentic conversations that foster genuine connections. While maintaining a professional demeanour, we create a welcoming space for our community to interact, share experiences, and engage with our brand.

Simplicity and Clarity

We believe in cutting through the noise to deliver straightforward and easily digestible content. Our social media posts are concise and to the point, ensuring that our message is clear and accessible to all. By presenting information in a simple and straightforward manner, we enhance the experience and promote engagement.

Approachable Voice

Our voice exudes confidence and authority, yet remains approachable, encouraging open dialogue and feedback. We strive to be a reliable resource and a trusted source of information that leads to genuine impact within our niche.

Co-Branding Principles

When setting up a co-branding partnership, there are several things that need to be defined.

1. Clarity on the common goal: The most important thing to define is the goal of the partnership. The common goal should be something that aligns with the purpose of all the organisations involved in the brand partnership.

2. Clarity on the measurement of success: The second step after knowing the specific goal of the campaign is knowing what the measurement of success will be and what co-branding type should be used. This can be partner branding, external campaigns, or other activities. Still, the measure of success of the partnership should be clearly defined for all organisations involved.

3. Clarity on the channels: Knowing the measurement of success from all organisations involved in the partnership, there can be clarity on what channels, content types and messaging can be used to reach the desired outcome. This includes discussing what social media and internal platforms are the most relevant in order to reach the common goal.

Clarity on the target audience: By illuminating the key characteristics that define the intended recipients of contents, it is important that the target audience is clearly defined so as to gain a sharper perspective on how to deliver our message.

4. Clarity on the content plan: Since there is clarity for the goal, the call to action, and the channels used, the next step is to evaluate the campaign's content plan. This includes determining what kind of content will be created, how will it be created, and within what timeline. Therefore, in the content plan, the following should be clearly defined:

The contents being shared

The content that will be created, and by whom

The audience

The timeline

In general, both parties must be involved in making the campaign a success.
